VT AJ Bell Global Growth Q1 2023 Report

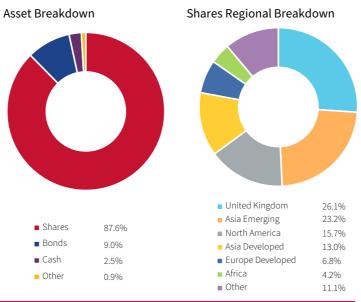

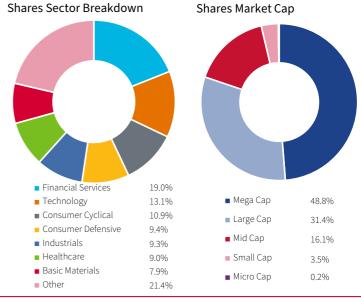

Commentary

Stock markets were broadly positive in the first three months of 2023. This was despite a series of bank failures in the US and Switzerland that took the market by surprise. These banks failed because they were unable to find alternative sources of funding after a rapid withdrawal of deposits. Initial reports of these failures led to market volatility, but all these problems appear to have been dealt with smoothly, with little sign of contagion.

Not all markets rose at the same pace, with large growth companies in developed markets seeing the best returns. The AJ Bell Global Growth fund has relatively high exposure to emerging markets and the Asia Pacific region. While positive, these areas didn't enjoy gains on the level of the developed markets.

The fund returned 0.8% for the quarter. This is slightly below the AJ Bell Adventurous Fund, which has a similar allocation to stocks, but is more heavily weighted to developed markets.
